The Illinois State Fair

Springfield Closed Up Hog Holes, Fixed Streets For First Fair In 1853

Article 1

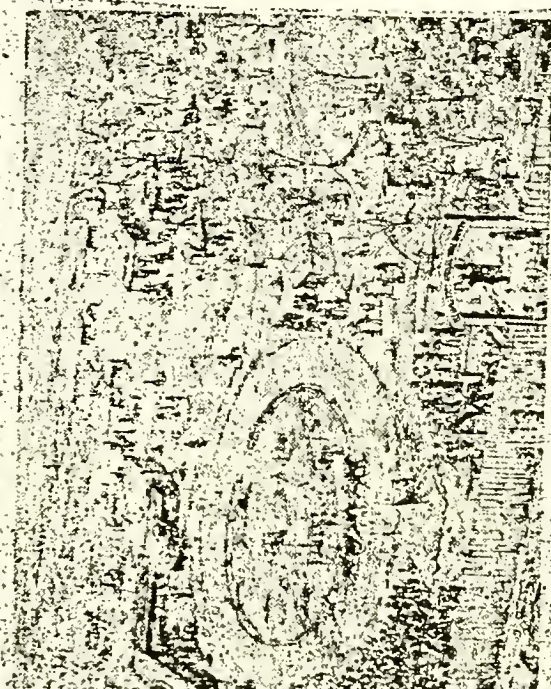

On a wooded 20 acre site on the outskirts of Springfield the first Illinois state fair was held. The first fair was an undertaking for a young man, John D. Smith, who had been a member of the Union of States but 25 years. The year 1853 was marked by a severe winter, and the fair was held in the month of March. The fair was held on the site of the present fairgrounds, which was then a tract of land for the fair. beautiful, the choice of herds and flocks, and the productions of the great valley of the "Mississippi" could be shown to each other and to our eastern friends. Dates chosen for the event were Oct. 11, 12, 13 and 14. Springfield was offered the opportunity of being host to the first fair by meeting these requirements: Setting aside a tract of land for the fairgrounds, fencing it in, erecting the necessary buildings, furnishing police protection, and putting up $1000 to cover expenses. The city was settled.

The fairgrounds was located a mile west of the state, then new state house—the present Sangamon county courthouse. The capital building was brand new at that time, the finishing touches having been made to the $250,000 structure during this same year of 1853. The site embraced an area now bounded by Washington and Monroe Sts., and Douglas Ave. and Adams Ave. Virtually the entire block now is occupied by the State Capitol, and the fairgrounds were held in the site of the present fairgrounds.

Chicago Warned Guests From Country To Beware Of 'Slick Tongued' Men

Chicago, July 16.—Urbane, sophisticated Chicago, artery of world trade and commerce, was just as eager in its younger days for week—this is state fair week, to attract the agricultural Illinois. Public buildings in the city were thrown open for use of visitors, the rural communities. In other it was suggested by newspaper that with a carpet bag for a pillow and a cloak or shawl for a cover, the male visitors thus would be comfortably accommodated. Politics made its debut at the fair this year despite objections of the management. Sen. Stephen A. Douglas, the "Little Giant," addressed a crowd one evening and Sen. L. Trumbull spoke on another occasion.

Chicago entries were unsuccessful in the competition. The greatest number of premiums went to exhibitors from Sangamon, Morgan and Greene counties, which were situated in the leading agricultural and stock breeding area of the state.

Alton, Peoria, Centralia, Freeport and Jacksonville, in that order, played hosts to the state fair in the following years. Then, in 1861, the exposition returned to Chicago. Abe Lincoln had entered the White House and the Civil War had begun.

For the farmers the big attraction was a two-horse corn cultivator. Not to be overlooked were the threshing machines, grafts and corn harvesters, and hay presses. Theatricals of women attracted attention, the operators of the machines, and they were busy while machines were being exhibited.

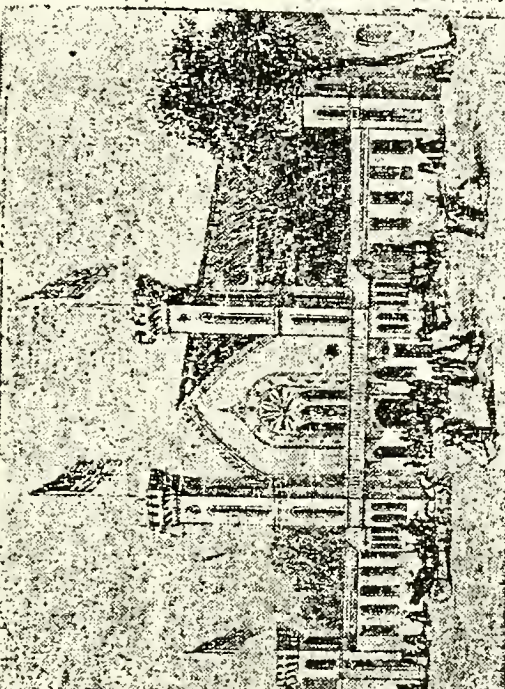

The fair was held on the grounds of the Chicago Driving Park association in the southeast section of the city. Newspapers warned their guests from the country to be on guard against thieves, especially the slick-tongued city scoundrels who were an acquaintance to the city's residents.

A scene at the Chicago fair.

By 1866, newspapers said, the fair had been established as a regular event—"as regular as Thanksgiving day or the Fourth of July." It again was held on the grounds of the Driving Park association.

Improvements were noted in many farm implements, especially the corn planters. New devices on exhibit included a hedge trimmer and a wool folder. The latter, which packed fleece into a small space for shipment, was described as a useful and ingenious machine.

Seventeen years were to elapse before Chicago again was awarded the Exposition. It happened here in 1883, and remained for four years.

Chicago again was awarded the Exposition. It happened here in 1883, and remained for four years.

The progress which had been made in improving farm machinery during the 17 year span was reflected in the exhibits on the grounds in 1883.

Each exhibitor in the machinery building had his own steam engine to operate the long lines of reeling harvesters, threshers, bladders, mowers and rakes. The operation of a combination harvester and binder was described by a city-bred newsman in this fashion:

"The great revolving rows of teeth take in about an armful of wheat straw; then the sliding sheets catch it up, flatten it out, and pass it through the rollers; then in some unexplainable automatic way the machine gathers it up in its arms, whips it into a neat sheaf, throws a cord around it, draws it tight, ties it up with a hard knot and bites the string off with its teeth, all in the space of about a second. The other end attends to the raking and rpling business, the farmhand having only to sit on the fence to look on."

The fair of 1883 was the most successful ever held in Chicago. On the fourth day of the exposition the crowd was estimated at 90,000. Attendance on any one day never again reached that figure.

In the three subsequent years of the fair in Chicago, a small profit was shown in 1885 but in the final year of 1886 the loss amounted to about $10,000.

By this time a move was under way to give the fair a permanent home. Eight years later the road agent voted to locate the exposition permanently in Springfield.

They Traveled To Alton Fair In Steamboat, Prairie Schooner, Surrey

Alton, July 17.—Clad in homespun and dancing prohibitions, hogs from the prairie, traveling by prairie schooners, steamboats, and that newest mode of transportation—the railroad—thousands of pioneers headed for Alton in the late fall of 1856 to attend the Illinois state fair.

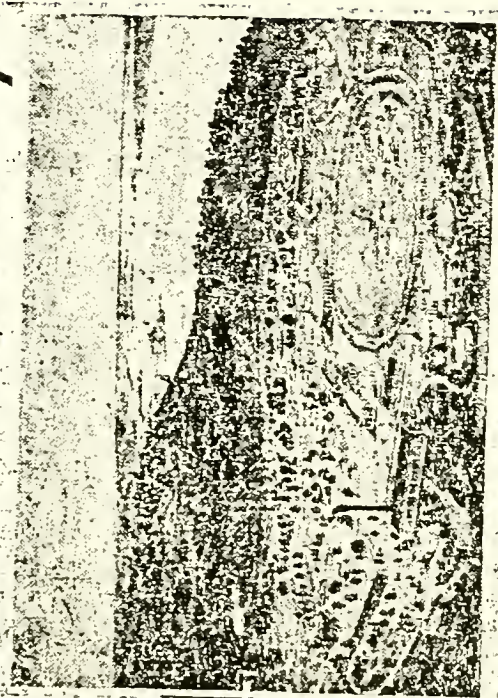

It was the fourth year of the exhibition, when its future was insecure. Its treasury was empty, and its friends were few.

The fourth anniversary of the fair at the exposition's permanent home in Springfield from 1857 to this year. The approach of the fair when it roamed the lake throughout the state, drawing all the larger cities over a year before settling permanently in the capital city.

In this state fair was held in Alton. Even as it was having a successful run up that day a move was made to take the next fair to Alton. Illinois, Alton, Jones, and Salem bid for it. City of Alton subscribed $3000 to bid for it. Fairgrounds and the fair were held in Alton.

A record-breaking number of livestock was entered in the competition. But there were few breeders of premium horses and cattle from the Alton area. The list of awards shows only a few prize ribbons going to residents of this section. In this select group was A. A. Hinkmaster, of Alton, who exhibited his first winning horse in the light harness horse class. In the same competition, George Barlow, also of Alton, won a prize for his only entry, a pair of harness horses.

The time of preparing the fair and the time of exhibiting were a hard time for the fair. The fair was held in Alton and North Alton and was held in the city of Alton. The fair was held in Alton and North Alton and was held in the city of Alton.

Bird's-eye view of the Alton fair in 1856.

But in the poultry department it was another story. Every award but one went to Madison county citizens. Among them were G. D. Wilcox, of Hildrely; Charles W. Drimmock, J. Junett, Miss J. Head, and J. T. DeBaum, of Godfrey.

Awards were made at the 1856 fair for the best plows, harrows, corn planters, harvesters, mowers, threshing machines, hay presses, corn shellers, and cultivators. And the entry list also contained such things as clothes washing machines, spinning wheels, churns, and other domestic utensils, pots, kettles, cooking stoves, kerosene lamps, and other household goods.

Attendance was good throughout the four day run of the fair and it was pronounced a success. After leaving Alton, the exposition continued to roam the state. But by 1894 the management could foresee a fatal decline if the fair were not situated permanently in one city where the facilities could be expanded to accommodate the ever-growing number of exhibitors and visitors. Several neighboring states already had settled their fairs in a permanent location, and Illinois officials feared the state would lose its position as a center for agricultural exhibits and affairs in those states would be so much greater that the Illinois fair might not exist in its old form. In 1894 the state board of agriculture moved the fair to Chicago, where it has remained ever since.

The fair would be held in Alton. Six cities were in the running—Springfield, Decatur, Peoria, Bloomington, Champaign and Alton. It required eight ballots before one city emerged with a majority of the 21 votes cast. Springfield was the victor with 11 votes.

Fairgoers Had To 'Wallow In Dust Three Inches Deep' Back In The 70s

Peoria, July 18.—The Illinois State fair, which this year reaches its centennial, of its founding, made nine appearances in Peoria during its 40-year migratory period prior to its permanent establishment in Springfield in 1894.

The fair was only 4 years old when it first came to Peoria in 1857. A 22-acre tract of the Peoria County Agricultural society was selected as the state fairgrounds site. It was situated about a mile from Peoria on a high and commanding spot. A number of rough hewn buildings were erected among the clustered trees on the grounds.

Livestock stalls were filled with animals as quickly as they were contributed. The array of blue blooded animals was described as the best ever assembled in the west. Reaping and mowing machines, pulled by horses, were demonstrated on the grounds. Farmers crowded around the displays of threshing machines, straw cutters, saws, seed planters and pumps.

Peoria was jammed with people who came to the fair. All of the public lodging houses were packed, and men sold space on their floors.

For the fair was provided a German band, a horse race track, a roller skating rink, a large building for the sale of goods, and a large building for the sale of goods.

Peoria had been awarded the 10th state fair, in 1862, but the exposition was abandoned that year because of the Civil war which was in its second year.

Eleven years later the fair again returned to this city. In the interim years advancements in farm machinery had kept pace with the progress of the farmers.

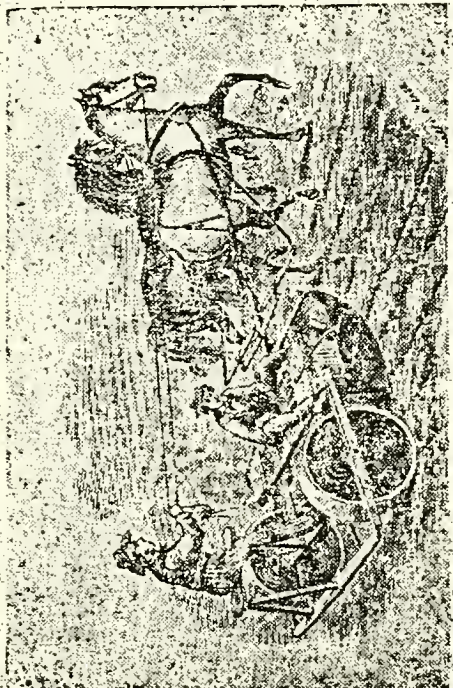

Two steam and two streetcar railroads operated from downtown Peoria direct to the entrance gates of the grounds.

There was no scarcity of the shady element. A newspaperman wrote that the city was "full of gamblers, thieves, pickpockets and rogues generally, and faro banks blossomed out on every side." City officials assigned a squad of 25 special police to duty on the fair grounds.

All business activity in Peoria ceased, on the fourth day of the fair to permit local working people to attend. And most of them took advantage of the holiday because the attendance that day reached new proportions with about 35,000 persons on the grounds.

On the biggest day of the fair that year, 40,000 persons crowded into the fairgrounds. Many were unable to find a place to sit and walked after spending hours waiting for a chance to sit.

The grounds were so crowded that the fairgoers had to wade through the mud to get to the grounds.

Brown's corn planter, which took first premium.

Seven years elapsed before Peoria again played host to the state exposition in 1881. Just a week before it was scheduled to open, President James A. Garfield succumbed to a bullet wound inflicted by an assassin. There was some talk of canceling the fair because of the tragedy, but preparations had gone too far and it was decided to proceed with the original plans. Buildings on the fairgrounds were stripped of the black of mourning.

At the time of the fair, the fairgrounds were in the hands of the Peoria Fair Association, which had been organized in 1870. The fair was held on the grounds of the Peoria Fair Association, which had been organized in 1870.

exposition. The cost of outfitting a fairgrounds was becoming too great to warrant receiving the ever-expanding fair for only two years. Neighboring states already had set up permanent grounds for their fairs.

These factors led officials to award the fair to Peoria for four consecutive years. The fair was held on the grounds of the Peoria Fair Association, which had been organized in 1870.

Centralia—1858

Lincoln-Douglas Feeling Carried Over To The Naming Of Livestock

Centralia, July 19—The approaching observance of the 100th anniversary of the Illinois state fair this year recalls the nomadic wanderings of the exposition in the early years of its founding—a gypsy-like existence which brought it to Centralia in the fall of 1858.

The fair then was in its infancy. It had been conceived five years earlier by a group of farmers who banded together under the name of the Illinois State Agricultural Society.

The year 1858 was a historic one. Abraham Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas, political arch enemies, were engaging in their famous debates as they campaigned for the U. S. Senate. Lincoln was to lose the senatorial campaign but two years later destiny would summon him to the White House.

The Centralia fair provided an excellent opportunity for Lincoln and Douglas to reach big audiences in their senatorial campaigning. Neither overlooked it. So intense became the feeling among partisan supporters of each of the two men that it provoked an unusual incident on the Centralia fairgrounds. A newspaper reporter of those days (himself very apparently partisan) gave this account of the incident:

Douglas, in the course of a speech to about 2000 persons on the grounds, launched into an unflattering description of the opposition party. This tirade aroused an unidentified woman to interrupt Douglas' speech, stalk to the front of the platform and propose three cheers for Abe Lincoln. The crowd took up the cheer, the writer said, and Douglas "slunk away from the stands" without making a further attempt to talk.

Illinois was in the grip of hard times in that year. This caused some reduction in the attendance but yet thousands turned out for the entire run of the fair, from Sept. 14 through 19.

The shortage of housing for visitors was acute. Hundreds of persons camped in tents around the grounds. Temporary buildings were constructed right on the site to supply meals and lodging. The Illinois Central railroad furnished cars that spanned two and one-half miles of sidetrack for sleeping accommodations. The railroad also ran free trains night and morning during the exposition from Centralia to Jonesboro and also to Decatur—approximately 100 miles in each direction—so that state fair visitors could find living accommodations there and commute back and forth daily to the fairgrounds.

About 350 stalls were built for livestock entered in the fair competition. Exhibits in all departments numbered 1789. In addition to livestock, these included plows, cultivators, shovels, hoes, corn planters, ox bows, ax handles, churns, cheese vats, carpet sweepers and apple parers.

Describing the opening day of the fair, Sept. 14, one writer said the grounds became "alive with moving bales, boxes, carriages, machines, descript and nondescript mechanism, horses, mules, jacks, cattle and sheep."

Fawkes' steam plow, big attraction at 1858 fair.

In the mechanical line, probably the biggest single attraction was the Fawkes' steam plow, named for its inventor, J. W. Fawkes. Fair sponsors had put up a purse of $5000 to be awarded for the best steam plow, if the plow were deemed practical. When demonstrated on the grounds, the plow excited great interest. The agricultural society's executive committee, after watching the plow at work, said it "settled the question that the steam plow can be made to work on our prairies." But the committee found that it was not "as perfect an instrument as Mr. Fawkes designs to make it" and two months later declined to award Fawkes the $5000 prize. However, he was given a $500 check to cover his expenses in transporting the plow to the fair.

The intensity of feeling between supporters of Lincoln and Douglas was carried over into the naming of livestock on exhibit at the exposition. A bull, owned by S. A. Dunlap, of Jacksonville, was named "S. A. Douglas." Another bull exhibited by W. P. Wither, of Decatur, bore the name "Abe Lincoln."

One of the exhibits, in the eye of the judges, was a yearling old boy, J. James Webster, of Safford. He drove a pair of yearling steers named Buck and Fred and handled them as a new man at that time noted, "as coolly and true as the best of men would guide a pair of yearling horses." This boy, the reporter added, "had trained the horses himself and is bound to be a great among men at some future day."

Display Of Horsemanship By Ladies Drew Much Comment At Freeport Fair

Freeport, July 22—The citizens of Freeport welcomed the Illinois state fair to their community in 1859, the seventh year of the exposition's existence, and again in the years of 1877 and 1878 before the fair settled down permanently in Springfield. In 1894, now recognized as the world's foremost agricultural pageant, the exposition will mark its centennial this year from Aug. 8-17.

In 1859 Freeport was a city of 7000. "Pleasantly situated," as a newspaper reporter of the day noted, "its business portion is well built and compact; and there are many handsome and pleasant residences."

As the opening day of the fair approached, the newsmen recorded that "the city is one scene of mingled noise, dust and gala enthusiasm."

Hotels overflowed with visitors. A temporary hotel was erected on the fairgrounds and by considerable crowding could accommodate about 1000 persons. Railroads ran special trains to nearby communities night and morning to allow those unable to find lodging in Freeport to obtain accommodations elsewhere and commute back and forth to the fair.

On the third day the fair swung into high gear. Illinois Central trains from the west pulled into Freeport with 24 packed cars. The Galena and Chicago railroad from the east brought in 36 more cars. About 6000 persons were aboard the two trains. Between LaSalle and Freeport, the I. C. reported it sold tickets to 2200 passengers. About 12000 persons paid their way into the fairgrounds that day and gate receipts exceeded the total for the entire run of the fair the previous year in Centralia.

The greatest attraction on the grounds was the steam plow. In general appearance this newly invented device resembled a locomotive engine and tender joined lengthwise. Two beams projected behind with a frame and gang of eight plows attached. A holler and another plow stood upright from the body of the machine. It measured 28 feet in length and weighed 10 tons. It was priced at $1500.

Other equipment on exhibit included reapers and mowing machines, threshers, corn shellers, saws, cider mills, tanneries, scales, washing machines, and

On the afternoon of Sept. 9, the last day of the fair, came the event which the masculine contingent had awaited with great anticipation. It was the display of horsemanship by the ladies. Four women were entered in the competition and a newsmen of the day looked askance at such doings. He described it in this fashion:

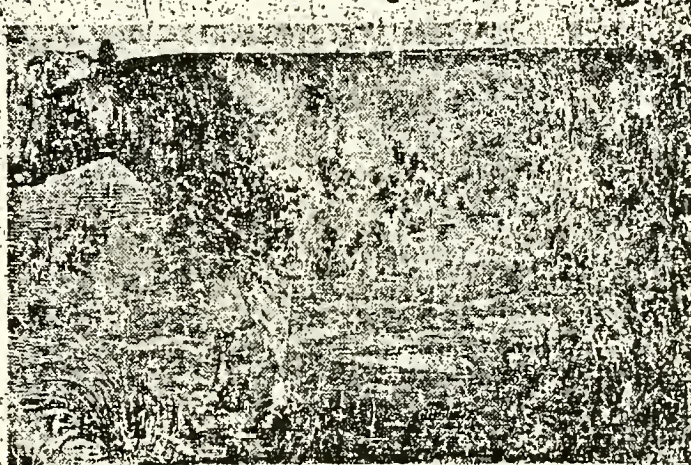

"Four females actuated by a desire to exhibit themselves to a gaping multitude, entered the ring on horseback in order to compete for the ribbons. The contest soon became narrowed down to two, and the contestants being strong minded and full of pluck, put their horses upon their speed and gave an exhibition of themselves (one of them especially) such as is rarely seen in so public a place. Lucy Stone herself would have been wot to the blush had she been present." (Lucy Stone was a noted advocate of women's rights).

The day after the exposition closed, Freeport, a reporter said, "resumed its usual calm and quiet aspect. With the last day of the fair departed, the multitude and their articles of exhibition."

After 18 years, during which the exposition continued its nomadic wandering from city to city, Freeport again played host to the fair—the 25th.

The fairgrounds at Taylor's park had undergone considerable overhauling. The grounds contained a good one mile track but in the previous year the fair management had banned horse racing as an evil which attracted "horse jockeys and gamblers" and as a result the track facilities went unused.

Farm machinery on exhibit showed many improvements by the manufacturers in the interim years. A public ovation was tendered during the fair to John Deere of Moline, plowmaker of the west. He made his first steel plow in 1840 out of an old hand-saw. Now his plant was turning out 300 daily.

The Adams Manufacturing Co. of Joliet was displaying a steel barbed fence wire. Claimed to be the only perfect barbed fence made, it had a four pointed barb woven in lengthwise. It was selling rapidly.

The next year, 1878, the fair again returned to Freeport under a policy then in effect of withdrawing it in the same city two consecutive years.

Midway in the fair a disastrous storm struck the area, finally ending the fair. The fairgrounds was deluged with rain. High winds blew down ten a sod shanty. Several people suffered cuts about the head and face but there were no serious accidents.

Something New Turned Up At Decatur Fair—Ditch Digger And Fence For Track

Decatur, July 24—Citizens of Decatur, attempting to lure the Illinois state fair to a permanent location in their community, donated $15,000 to outfit a fairgrounds in the year 1863 but their efforts were unsuccessful although they managed to attract the exposition here on four occasions.

A 40 acre tract two miles west of Decatur was utilized as the site of the fair of 1863. One desirable feature of the site was an abundant supply of spring water. This item to quench the parched throats of the visitor who trod the dusty fairgrounds had been available in only limited quantities at the previous fairs in other cities.

A half-mile race track was situated near the center of the grounds. It was surrounded by a fence, which a newspaper reporter of the times hailed as a progressive step because it "prevented all possibility of collision with outside vehicles during a race." At the west end of the track was the amphitheater, between 300 and 400 feet long, accommodating from 5000 to 6000 persons.

In the line of farm equipment there were corn planters, plows, seed drills, gang plows, mowers, reapers, harrows, sugar mills, seed rollers, cultivators, and a long needed ditching machine. The latter was capable of cutting a ditch 3 feet wide at the top, 14 inches wide at the bottom and 22 inches deep. By using two horses on the capstan and with three men assisting the operation, it was estimated the machine could cover from 100 to 160 rods (between 550 and 880 yards) in one day. The device sold for $250.

One discordant note was struck at the fair, causing the women visitors to be greatly disappointed. The sewing machine, which had been introduced on the American scene only a few years earlier, was being exhibited by only two manufacturers. Others who were building the machines refused to exhibit at the fair because of a dispute over selection of judges.

But there was a new device on exhibit to catch the feminine eye. It was a knitting machine, operated by steam or other power. Billed as being capable of making 5000 stitches per minute, its manufacturer claimed it would turn out a pair of socks or stockings in 15 minutes.

To illustrate its advantages, these statistics were cited: In an average family there are six persons, each wearing out at least four pair of socks annually, making a total of two dozen pairs for the entire family. To knit this number with coarse yarn it would take one person at least 48 days; with fine yarn, 60 days. But the knitting machine would do the entire job in one day. Small wonder the mothers of large families cast covetous glances at the machine. It sold for $75.

The war between the states was in its fourth year when the 12th annual state fair was held in Decatur in 1864.

The second fair in Decatur opened Sept. 12. On the following day visitors to the grounds included Gov. Richard Yates, whose term was drawing to a close, and Richard J. Oglesby, the Republican union candidate for governor who would succeed Yates in January of 1865. Both men appeared before the crowds in the amphitheater. Lyman Trumbull, the U. S. senator from Illinois, joined them on the grounds the next day.

The sewing machine wrangle had been threshed out by this time and the manufacturers were out in force.

The amphitheater crowd was treated to an exciting few minutes during a racetrack event featuring a trot of double teams in harness. One pair, "Nabobish" and "Lady Sherman," owned by J. H. Conlisk, of Chicago, became unmanageable and laced pellmell around the track five times. As they passed the stands the fifth time, the team's groom, Charles Peterson, "with true heroism," rushed upon them like a deer and arrested their further progress within 50 feet," a newspaper account said.

The entire audience, July 20, cheered Charles," the story continued. "The gallant fellow seemed to think he was getting too much applause for so small an act."

Despite the runaway, the team took the first and third heats and won the $150 purse.

In the exhibition of lady horseback riding, Mrs. S. R. Smith, of Springfield, defeated three opponents, including Ruth Gardner and Elizabeth Weltmer, both of Decatur. The decision of the judges proved unpopular, however. A news writer reported "the Decatur part of the audience, with exceedingly bad taste, expressed their dissatisfaction of the awards in a boisterous manner."

Horse racing at the fairs was falling into disrepute. "Newspapers said "It has got to be the arena for horse jockeys and gamblers to practice their devilish acts not only upon each other but more generally and outrageously upon the credulous and unsuspecting." But the newspapers conceded that fully half of the crowds attending the fairs went only because of the racing program.

From Decatur the fair went to Chicago in 1865 and 1866 and to Quincy in 1867 and 1868. It returned to Decatur for what was to be the final two years in this city—1869 and 1870.

Full livestock stalls again marked the fair in 1870. Temporary stalls were erected to accommodate the big entry list. The animal attracting the most attention was a draft horse newly imported from England, weighing 1900 pounds. Among the cattle were 12 milk cows, 1 steer, 1 roan lest of the dozen steers tipped the scales at 3100 pounds. The big hog on the grounds, a Chester White weighing 1914 pounds, was the first night of the fair.

Rain the last two days wrecked attendance. It made roads almost impassable. There were no more streets in Decatur nor were there any macadamized roads leading from the city to the fairgrounds. This fact led an out of town newspaperman to comment, "It was incomprehensible that Decatur should ask that the fair be permanently established here."

Prices Skyrocketed In Quincy During Time Of Expositions In That City

Quincy, July 25—In the early years of the Illinois state fair, the larger cities of the state vied for the privilege of staging it in their community—a practice which brought it to Quincy in 1867 and 1868 on the only two occasions it ever was held here.

The 100th anniversary of the founding of the exposition will be observed at the fair this year from Aug. 8 to 17.

A 75 acre tract of the Adams County Agricultural society served as the site of the 15th and 16th annual state fairs in Quincy. The grounds were situated on a high bluff about two miles east of the city.

Quincy was a thriving, progressive community. Just five days before the fair opened on Sept. 30, ground was broken for the Quincy railway; a new $2,000,000 bridge across the Mississippi was under construction, and Quincy college was shaping a promising future.

A long drought preceded fair week. No rain had fallen for more than six weeks and dust lay three to four inches deep on the roads and in the fairgrounds itself. An attempt was made in the city council to adopt a sprinkling program to allay the dust, but the majority of the councilmen voted it down. The council's decision provoked former Gov. John Wood, a leading Quincy citizen, and he dipped into his pocket to have the road sprinkled from Quincy to the grounds.

With thousands of visitors straining hotel facilities to the limit, prices for a night's lodging skyrocketed. The lower class hotels doubled their usual rates of $2 a day, higher class hostels boosted their rates from the usual $3 up to $8. Hackmen also pushed their fares upward. They charged $2 a head for the two mile trip from town to the fairgrounds.

The premium list was a big one. Poultry, swine, sheep, horses and cattle vied for more than $10,000 in prizes. Awards also were listed for the outstanding mechanical and agricultural implements and household articles. These included such things as windmill, pumps, water pumps, cotton gins, ditch-digging machines, hay racks, cider mills, corn shellers, seed planters, seed rollers, straw cutters, potato crushers, reaping machines, windmills, sewing machines, and a host of other articles.

best artificial teeth and the best artificial limbs.

John Deere of Moline who was fast building a reputation as the leading plowmaker of the west exhibited a number of his implements on the grounds. His firm took the first place prize of $10 and a silver medal for having the best and largest display of plows at the exposition.

The exhibit of farm products was extremely small, leading a candid newspaper reporter to complain that it was "a disgrace to the great agricultural state of Illinois." The sparse display consisted of about 20 bushels of ear corn, 10 bushels of potatoes, 10 beets, a dozen heads of cabbage, a bushel of turnips, a half bushel of parsnips and a few eggplants.

But the opposite was true of the display of grapes. It was described as the finest in the west. Heading the exhibitors in this department was William Stewart of Summit fruit farm, two miles from Quincy, who was hailed as the leading grape grower of the country.

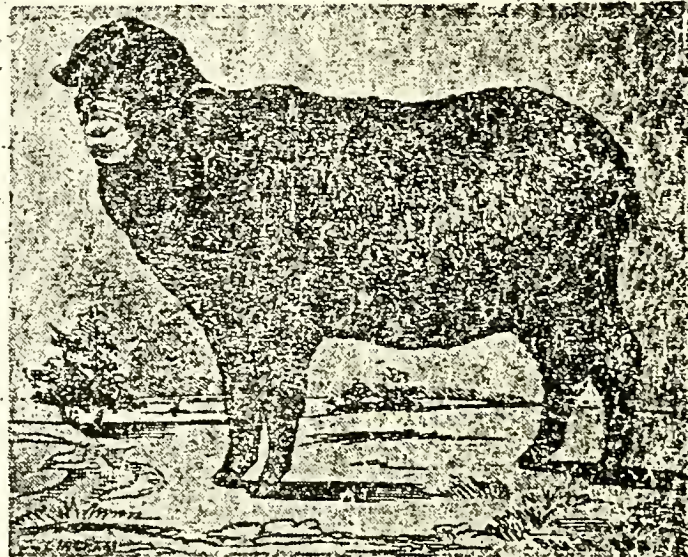

While not engaged in competition, a tandem team of four colts owned by Isalah Strawn, of Jacksonville, was put through its paces before the crowds by Strawn's 12-year-old son. The colts, hitched Indian file to a skeleton wagon, ranged in age from 3 to 4 months. They were valued at more than $5000.

One serious accident marred the exposition. A young girl, standing on a wagon seat to watch the horse races, was thrown to the ground when a horse hitched to the wagon suddenly kicked. A newspaper account said it could not be determined whether the horse kicked the child or stepped on her head. She suffered a skull fracture.

This was the first state fair in which a premium was offered for the best display of equestrianism by women. A 13-year-old St. Louis girl stole the show, and the $40 first prize money.

Women also competed in driving a single horse or a double team. Miss S. Stockwell, of Quincy, emerged the winner in this competition and was awarded a $40 prize.

The fair of 1867 ended on a dismal note. A cold rain settled in, dampening enthusiasm. For the financial success of the exposition depended on the attendance. Gate receipts totaled $2,000, leaving the managers with a loss of $1,000.

"Transit," winner of first premium at an early Illinois state fair.

Following year, the number of exhibits was equal to any previous year but the exposition proved a financial failure.

There were two reasons for the disappointing attendance that year. First, inclement weather set in during fair week. Second, and perhaps most important, horse racing had fallen into disrepute, and the management banned a racing program from the fairgrounds track. Newspapers of the times said horse racing had become "an arena for horse jockeys and gamblers to practice their devilish acts." Despite this criticism, the fair had been the chief attraction of many fair visitors and when it was banished these people stayed away. A news writer covering the fair of 1868 said it appeared that "thousands of people, many of them farmers, who visit the fair because of the excitement of the horse course is omitted."

Lack Of Shade Drew This Comment: The Egyptian Sun Has A Melting Way

DuQuoin, July 26—The Illinois state fair, approaching the century mark this year, was staged in DuQuoin in 1871, the 19th year of its existence, but never returned to lower Egypt in the 40 years it wandered before settling down permanently in Springfield.

The 150th anniversary of the founding of the exposition will be observed at the fair from Aug. 3-17.

The state fair came into being in 1853. It was founded by a group of farmers, describing themselves as "friends of agriculture," who formed an organization called the Illinois State Agricultural society. The society selected Springfield as the site of the first rural jubilee. The second annual exposition also was held in the state capital. Then began a nomadic existence. The fair traveled to the larger cities of the state—Chicago, Alton, Peoria, Centralia, Freeport, Jackson, Decatur and Quincy—for 18 years before the management awarded the fair of 1871 to DuQuoin.

Twenty-three years later officials scaled a halt to the gypsy-like status of the exposition and made Springfield its permanent home. There, on the present 406 acre site with a fairgrounds plant valued at $1,000,000, the 100th anniversary of the founding of the fair will be marked this year.

DuQuoin was situated in the heart of the fruit and grain growing area of southern Illinois. It was considered an advantageous location for the state fair since it was served by the Illinois Central, and St. Louis, Belleville and Southern Illinois railroads.

It was expected to prove beneficial to the people of the region, most of whom had been unable to attend the previous expositions because the sites had been such a great distance from their homes.

To the farmers of labor saving machinery, a fair in DuQuoin meant they would be striking a territory whose citizens were becoming heavy purchasers of such equipment.

St. Louis officials let the fair make it known that residents of the community would attend the exposition in large numbers in proof of the fact that a direct rail road line had been built between DuQuoin and St. Louis, cutting the travel time between the two cities to three hours.

Hotels and other boarding houses offered accommodations to the visitors at regular rates. None charged over $2 a day for board and lodging and these prices led a newspaperman, who had covered previous state fairs, to comment:

"This conduct on the part of the people of DuQuoin is in pleasant contrast with the swindling performances which have characterized those of many other places where the fair has been held."

The fairgrounds was located about one mile northwest of the center of DuQuoin. While containing an abundant supply of water, the grounds lacked trees for shade. This, one reporter related, was a distinct drawback since "the Egyptian sun has a melting way."

The sun beat down on the opening day of the fair, Sept. 25. Dust conditions were allayed by sprinkling. The livestock entries were numerous. Durhams, as usual, were the most numerous among the cattle on exhibit. Outstanding among the horses were about 100 head of the ponderous Norman breed. Their weight ranged from 1500 to 2300 pounds.

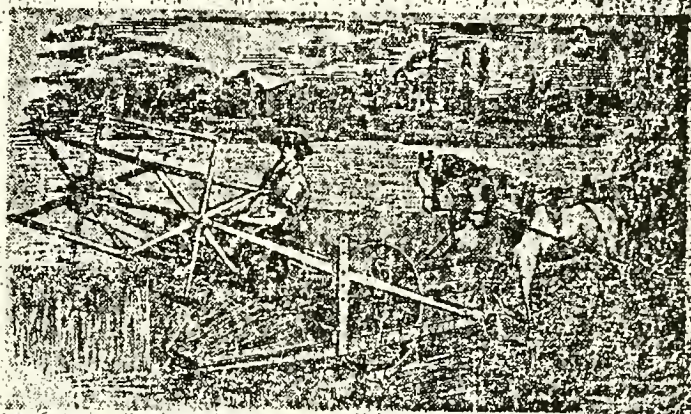

All the varieties of farm machinery were on display, including corn planters, plows, seed drills, gang plows, mowers, reapers, harrows, sugar mills, seed rollers and cultivators.

The management banned side shows from the grounds but their tents were pitched a short distance away.

Customarily the first two days of the fair were devoted chiefly to completing the entry list and installing exhibits in their proper place. By the third day, however, the fair had swung into high gear. Twelve thousand persons, mostly residents of the region, crowded into the grounds that day.

A newsmen noted that the "Egyptians of the area" showed essentially different characteristics from those of the people living in the central and northern part of the state.

Their manners and style of dress are primitive," he wrote.

Rugg's reaper and mower, for which was awarded a diploma at an early Illinois state fair.

"but their kindness and hospitality are proverbial and their antecedents as a people stand as high as those of any of their neighbors who inhabit what are usually recognized as more progressive regions."

Many of the agricultural implements on display proved to be novelties to the people of southern Illinois and they examined the farm machinery with great interest. The newspaper writer felt that the exposition was "sure to do more toward modernizing the Egypt than anything that has occurred in its history."

Farmers Crowded Around Corn Stalk Cutters, Sulky Plows At Olney Fair

Olney, July 23.—The people of Olney put on their best bib and tucker and went to the Illinois state fairs of 1887 and 1888—right in their own home town.

The state fair came to Olney in the days when the exposition pursued a migratory course. Its nomadic existence took it to most of the large cities throughout the state.

But with its appearance here the time was near at hand when the fair would cease the wanderings of its first 40 years and settle down to a permanent home in Springfield.

When the fairs of 1887 and 1888 were awarded to Olney, a strong movement already was developing to give the exposition a permanent location. The management recognized that the migratory plan belonged to a former age when the country was new and transportation facilities limited. With the advent of the railroad, distances were reduced.

Communities no longer were clamoring for the privilege of playing host to the exposition—the cost of outfitting a fairgrounds was becoming too great to warrant receiving the fair for only two years. Neighboring states already had set up permanent grounds for their fairs and the management of the Illinois exposition realized that the facilities available in those states would be so much more attractive than the Illinois state fair would begin a fatal decline.

These facts led officials to locate the fair in Peoria for four consecutive years after the exposition left Olney. Those were destined to be the last years under the migratory system.

In 1894, the management voted to award the permanent location to Springfield. In the intervening years the fair has grown into the world's greatest agricultural pageant. On its present 406 acre site, with a plant valued at $7,000,000, the exposition will mark its centennial this year from Aug. 8 to 17.

Foul weather was the lot of the fair of 1887 in Olney. Attendance was limited because of heavy and continuing rains during fair week. But the inclement weather failed to dampen enthusiasm of the citizens of Richland and adjoining counties. Thousands of farmers and stock breeders of southern Illinois flocked the fairgrounds. For the majority of the people in the area it was the first opportunity to visit a state fair.

The management felt certain the farmers of that section "carried away an inspiration into many localities in which little attention has been given to breeding of improved stock or adopting more advanced and profitable systems of farming."

The entries of cattle and horses were equal to any previous year. The poultry exhibit was the largest in 10 years. Farm products on display were thought to exceed all other years. There was a lack of exhibits in the mechanical arts department which one fair official attributed to the fact that this was not a manufacturing section of the state.

But there was no shortage of farm machinery on exhibit. Farmers crowded around such things as a traction steam engine, portable fence, portable grist mill, cornstalk cutter, sulky plow, harvester and binder, thresher, corn planter, potato digger and a root and vegetable cutter.

The influx of nearby residents for the fair was not enough to make it a financial success that year. Receipts fell $14,000 short of expenses.

Attendance was better in the following year of 1888. But the number of exhibitors dropped noticeably. This was blamed on an early move by the management which sought to pare expenses by taking $4000 off the premiums offered. Only 37 head of cattle were exhibited, heavy and light horse departments fell off, sheep and hog entries were meagre.

However, when the exposition closed, the fair of 1888 was a black. Receipts exceeded expenses by about a thousand dollars.

Exposition Building First Structure Built On Permanent Fairgrounds

On the Fourth of July, 1894, cornerstone laying ceremonies were held for the first new building on the grounds of the Illinois state fair after Springfield was made its permanent home.

The occasion presaged a 53 year period of growth in which the plant has expanded until it now is valued at $7,000,000.

The first structure built on the permanent grounds was called the Exposition building. The cornerstone of the building was shipped here from a Montello, Wis. quarry. The stone was of the hardest type of granite and was known as one of the "eternal rocks."

Among the articles deposited in the cornerstone were two medals issued by the state board of agriculture, two small American flags, a cent piece coined in 1838 and a cent piece of 1853; copies of the Illinois State Journal and Illinois State Register; and a picture of the governor of the state, John P. Altgeld.

This was the beginning. The first state fair on the grounds opened Sept. 24, 1894. Thousands of school children were admitted free on the first day. Races on the newly renovated track were the center of attraction.

In the following year, with a $25,000 appropriation from the general assembly, the management let contracts for a machinery hall, a building, grandstand, cattle and horse barns, sheep and swine pavilion, a fire station and a main entrance, which was located on the southwest corner of the grounds. Officials were overwhelmed with the attendance that year and raised the receipts of $53,000 as "the crowning glory of all the fairs ever held."

A sharp cut in attendance in half at the 1896 exposition. The next year the management set aside a day as "Old Soldiers day" and to great was the turnout that the number of leaders prepared for the event fell far short of supply. In 1898, Star Ponter, who was a stallion, defeated Joe...

Here is a view of the grandstand at the Illinois state fair. It was replaced by the present grandstand in 1927.

New buildings were continually being erected on the grounds. In 1899, the Woman's building was constructed. Still further improvements were needed, however. The amphitheater was too small to accommodate the large crowds and the legislature was asked for an appropriation to enlarge the structure.

Because inclement weather seemed to plague the fair each year, the management decided in 1900 to hold the exposition two weeks earlier thenceforth to take advantage of better prevailing weather conditions.

Machinery hall, in 1901, was suffering acute growing pains. It had become inadequate, although at the time it was built it was expected to be ample for years.

A new coliseum, started in 1901, was used for the first time at the exposition of 1902. But even as one new structure was dedicated, another was lost. On the night of Sept. 20 the woman's building, only three years old, burned to the ground. The management built anew, however, and the following year another woman's building rose above the ruins of the old.

The great Dan Patch, King of the harness horses, raced on the fairgrounds track in 1904. The next fall all tent shows on the grounds were placed in one area, a section which became famously known to young and old as "happy hollow."

In 1910 crowds gaped when one of the new fangled flying machines, piloted by Walter C. Brook-ins, landed at the fairgrounds after a 7 hour and 12 second trip from Chicago with but two stops. Brookins won the $10,000 Chicago Record Herald prize for the record breaking flight. His actual flying time was 5 hours and 44 minutes and his average speed was 33 miles an hour. Later an automobile driven by Barney Oldfield raced the plane around the fairgrounds track. Oldfield's car overturned in the course of the daring event but the veteran race driver escaped with only slight injuries.

The dates for the fair were moved up again in an effort to escape the rainy weather but this proved of little help in 1915 when a rainy spell set in during fair week.

In 1916, the headline speaker on Republican day was Charles Evans Hughes, G.O.P. nominee for president. Democrat day speakers included Gov. Edward F. Dunne.

A disastrous fire again hit the fairgrounds in 1917. The dome building, most picturesque structure on the grounds, was destroyed by a blast of unknown origin. The building was being used as one time by soldiers encamped on the grounds. The huge dome dome had been specially constructed for use at the World's Columbian Exposition in Chicago and was purchased for the state fairgrounds when the world's fair ended. The general offices of the state fair board were located in the building and the space under the dome had been used for county and agricultural exhibits.

At the 1918 fair, the 14th anniversary of Illinois admission to the union was celebrated.

Ruth Law, a well known aviator, thrilled fair crowds in 1920 with death defying stunts. Her minimum that year rose to a new all-time high of $155,631. In the following year auto polo was introduced in front of the grandstand and Jersey Fling, one of the most added new thrills, first came from a speeding automobile and an airplane.

Auto races became the big attraction in 1924. And in 1925, for year a new idea in stadium sports, the auto polo, was inaugurated. In that year the management announced the purchase of a new dome, 219 acres, back to the grounds, expanding the fairgrounds site to 350 acres.

The 5th anniversary of the Exposition in 1927 was celebrated by the removal of the old grandstand and a new grandstand placed in front of the fairgrounds with its dressing room, rest room, and a place for the new grandstand. The new dome built facing east so that the noon sun would not be in the eyes of the spectators. Day speaker that year was J. Hamilton Lewis from Illinois.

The new 1927 livestock barn, grounds, and a new grandstand in 1929. The price of the fair was $1,000,000. The fair was held in 1932 on the grounds of the fairgrounds.

FLAG, State

The Illinois Flag

Many Illinoisans are familiar with the beautiful state banner that stands at the left of the American flag in executive and administrative offices, but as they view the emblem, wondering respectfully the national emblem, few realize that it was authorized only 34 years ago this month. Even fewer, perhaps, know that if it had not been for a patriotic woman Illinois might have waited longer than July, 1915, to adopt an official banner of her own.

Illinois had been a state 94 years when Frank Lawrence, of Galesburg, state president of the Daughters of the American Revolution, awoke to the fact that we were without official colors. Early in 1912 Mrs. Lawrence decided to do something about it. In the three years that followed she promoted a state-wide contest with local D.A.R. chapters serving as centers of the competition the purpose of which was to bring forth a design that connoted both dignity and beauty. The present banner was the result and the legislature, viewing it in 1915 gave it the status of legal authorization.

The first official flag of the state was made by a firm in Washington, D. C. Its dimensions were three by five feet and it carried the state seal against a white background. The flag is of silk and carries the challenge "State Sovereignty, National Union." The motto could be reminiscent of current political slogans, but that thought was far from mind when the flag was adopted. It was intended to serve as a reminder of our greatness as a state and to intensify our sense of our membership in the United States.

It is fitting that the creation of our national flag and Mrs. Lawrence the inspiration of the state flag, both happened in the same place. Mrs. Lawrence was born in 1871 in a small town in Illinois. She is first all a Florence, the daughter of a bloodless man, who was a member of the Illinois state senate and daughter of Governor Joseph W. Carter. She was author of the measure which made Illinois the official song of the state. Though the song was written in 1899, 44 years ago, it remained for Mrs. Lawrence to see to it that the stirring melody with its stimulating words, was given the recognition it deserved. The song was first sung at the reunion of Civil War veterans in 1911, at which the late President William McKinley presided as toastmaster. It was then announced as a song first with words that she believed that former Governor Carter, himself a Civil War veteran, was present and heard the rendition.

Strong symbols like a flag and a song stir men's better emotions. They are a lasting reminder of things American and whose pulse never more safely needs to be felt at this hour.

L. 1845, p. 289

Tyler D. Hewitt, commissioner died in 1836, indebted to the State as commissioner of saline lands, in the sum of $3176.47. Levi Hargrave, a security on his bond, fraudulently obtained possession of from $2500 to $3000 from his house a few hours after his death. A judgment was obtained on the bond and an execution issued, whereby Hargrave's lands were sold and his property exhausted, the state realizing thereby $1768.40. Some of the securities on said bond are dead and estate of no value; some are insolvent, two, including Hargrave, ran away from the State and there is little probability the balance can ever be made of any of them. Another judgment since obtained for $400 in said county, is, with the first judgment, the ascertained amount of said Hewitt's defalcation. It is also shown, that the administrator of said Hewitt has disposed of the property, real and personal, of his intestate, reserving the widow's thirds, and has made a settlement with the probate justice of said county, whereby there remains in the hands of said administrator, a small amount over $400, which the administrator now proposes to pay over.
 Proposal accepted by state.
